Harbor Defence.

It is remarkable to what an extent the operation of natural causes may contribute to render valueless the works constructed for the protection of harbors or rivers, a striking example of which fact is afforded in the case of the Cape Fear River at its mouth The fortifications built for the protection of the entrance and which might have been fully efficient at the time when projected, have since been, to a very great degree, depreciated by the breaking out of New Inlet, at a point above and distant from their location . To all intents and purposes Wilmington and its commerce is totally without defence since it is evident that the forts on Oak Island could offer no impediment to hostile vessels of war, who might choose to enter at the Inlet several miles distant : and the construction of the necessary works at that point would entail an expense for exceeding that required to close up the New Inlet altogether.

In similar cases we understand that this course has been recommended by the Engineer Department, and in more than one actually carried out with the best results, having evidently had the effect of protecting the harbor much more efficiently than any fortifications could have done, while at the same time the incidental benefit to the navigation has been great and decided.

These considerations are certainly well worthy of attention, and we have reason to believe that they have been brought to the notice of the Engineer department, and that the closing of New Inlet is regarded as the most efficient and easily available method that can be adopted for the strengthening of the harbor, under existing circumstances. That it would fully answer the purpose we believe there can be no question, nor is there any doubt but that it would answer more fully than any other plan could. If we are not very much misinformed, indeeds the estimated cost of works at Federal Point would very considerably exceed that of closing up the passage at that point altogether, while at the same time the latter would contribute a main part to the chain of works necessary to the restoration of the former depth of wateron the main bar.

It is certainly a strong, if not an unanswerable argument in favour of the appropriation, for carrying on the projected works for the improvement of our bar that they will obviate the necessity for military works of much more expensive character; and which, unless the improvements shall be constructed, will be, and indeed are now, imperatively demanded for the protection of the river under the present position of affairs.

This is no mere theory or notion of ours, but is in accordance with the highest scientific and practical authority. At the earliest possible moment we shall endeavour to obtain the proper data in facts, figures. and reliable estimates, and lay them before our readers. We feel confident that they will fully bear us out in all and more than all we have said. Of this, we are certain having already sufficient definite information upon the subject to place it beyond the

The Nebraska Bill at the North.

Territorial Bills had taken place, by a vote sufficienttriends by surprise. For days past, noses had been the skies should fall. counted and its passage and even its majority in the Senate were fixed facts. We have deprecated any attempt to make a party matter out of this affair, as between Southern men, and we deprecate such attempt now as strongly and as much as ever, but we cannot pretend blindness to the strange spectacle which the Northern vote presents. Not a single Northern Whig Senator voted for the bill-not one. The division line is drawn and not one individual dares to pass it. The northern whig party has seperated itself totally and en masse from the southwith the Southern Senators they neither have nor pretend to any affinities. Such a state of things must have struck even the strongest whig partizan as being something ominous; and it is ominous in more great political parties of the country so severed by a union between fellow-partizans residing in different sections is at an end.

On the other hand, the record of Democratic votes is a something of a more cheering character. It is the bright and steady light of nationality, illuminating the dark waves of sectional strife and animosity. It points the way to a haven of rest and peace under the protection of the constitution. It is cheering to the heart of the true patriot, by whatever party name he may have called himself, to know that one great national organization yet retains sufficient vitality to set at defiance the dictation of faction and the impulses of sectional animosity.

Nor must the courage and high-mindedness of the 14 Northern Democratic Senators whose names appear recorded for the bill be underrated. They will have a most powerful tide of opposition to stem at home. They will have popular clamor—the appeals of the pulpit, and if we can judge any thing from obcandidly think that at the present time the majority 6th inst. A trivial circumstance which occurred some months ince induced a slight feeling of distrust as to the genuineness of a certain pension claim which had been admitted a number of years ago. The matter was quietly but thoroughly sifted, and it was discovered that it and some twelve or fourteen other similar claims had been established years since by perjury and forgery, and been regularly paid to the present time, and that between forty and fifty thousand dollars had thereby been abstracted from the public treasury. The proof against the persons suspected was deemed conclusive.
